About the Euro-Mediterranean University Institute (EMUI)

The Euro-Mediterranean University Institute (EMUI) was founded in collaboration with the Complutense University of Madrid host to our Spain Campus, and an EU, Maghreb and Middle East University Consortium. Officially launched in Malta on October 16th 2007, the events were hosted at the Mediterranean Conference Centre (Valletta), with institutional support from the Government of the Republic and the Embassy of Spain.

Recent developments in the Maltese Education Act now enable the EMUI to apply for the Tuition Centre status with views to establish a second campus for its academic provision in line with our pan-European foundational goal. Former Spanish Minister for Universities and Chair in Sociology, Dr Luis González-Seara holds the maximum institutional representation.

The EMUI designs and delivers its academic and research projects in partnership with Universities of the Consortium, which undertake teaching commitments in the EMUI academic provision at their own expense, in line with the not-for-profit scope and applicable bilateral agreements. This is reflected within the Academic & Research Council and the Advisory Board as appropriate. Nonetheless, consultation may be undertaken with suitable Maghreb and Middle East institutions external to the Consortium to ensure optimal quality standards.

The Euro-Mediterranean University Institute in Madrid

The Euro-Mediterranean University Institute (EMUI) arises in Spain as a Research University Institute of the Complutense University of Madrid (UCM). In cooperation with the homologue institutions in Malta and Fes (Morocco), the creation of the EMUI_UCM implies the consolidation of the Euro-Mediterranean Southern University. The Complutense Institute – EMUI was approved by the UCM Government Council on December the 16th, 2009.

The Autonomous Community of Madrid (CAM) has a broad scientific and research variety of programs with high quality, which are developed through the different higher education centers, attached in virtue of the corresponding State competences transferred. These circumstances and others such as geostrategic, political, social and economical considerations make it appropriate, Madrid to arise as a reference for excellence programs, multidisciplinary and convergent, covering those issues dealing with the building of the European model and the policies aimed at the guaranteeing of the success of the project. The offer of the CAM would be notably reinforced.

The projection and international cooperation at a scientific-cultural and academic-research level of the EMUI would reinforce the complementary projection and international cooperation at a political-institutional, socio-economical and business level. We would like to highlight that the EMUI becomes the first Spanish University Institution with specific competences, which necessarily have interdisciplinary character, referred to its purpose and goals.

Institutional Relations

Worth acknowledging are the contributions by Universities of the Consortium, the EMUI Executive Board and the Cabinet & Coordination team. Nonetheless, as per agreed at the Second Academic and Research Council Meeting, held on May 31st 2008, a more systematic approach is currently underway to render longer term commitments sustainable through the enlargement of our Advisory Board and Academic & Research Council.

The EMUI acknowledges the support provided by the following institutions:

- Anna Lindh Euro-Mediterranean Foundation for the Dialogue between Cultures. The EMUI is member of the Malta National framework.

Academic Portfolio: Postgraduate Studies

Masters degrees

European Union and Mediterranean: Historical, Cultural, Political, Economic and Social Bases

Though prior knowledge is not a compulsory requirement, EMUI Diploma graduates may be in a more advantageous position than students unacquainted to EMUI academic provision. Hence, prospective students may take a prior knowledge test available upon request for the EMUI Academic Service to provide feedback on suitability and additional support our Faculty may provide. This encompassing programme should enable successful students to enhance their career prospects or as a direct route to the Doctoral Programme in Euro-Mediterranean Studies.

This course is the result of an integration process of academic networks which work on European and Mediterranean issues. It is aimed at educating professionals with a specific vision, with the capacity to foment the integration among Europe, the South and the East Mediterranean. Therefore, the priority lines are: the evolution of the European integration and the operation of its institutions, the development of the legal and economic infrastructures, the development cooperation, the socio-economic European culture, the community policies and especially their Euro-Mediterranean projection. Thus it is offered a postgraduate course of excellence, which permits the acquisition of theoretical and practical knowledge and the expertness of its students in European Union issues.

EuroMed: Information and Knowledge Society

Modern societies are shored up by fundamental principles that legitimate every system claiming the appellative of democratic, and pursue to set the conditions for the instauration and stability of a welfare society. These aims are not possible without the referent of the “knowledge society”, which is expected to count with agents of the proper or generated resources. This management must not only meet the profile of the users, but also be assisted by educational policies, which disseminate the resources and promote their rational administration. A political programme of this nature is, at the same time, impossible without recurrent academic-research programmes.

The political, social and cultural space that is described is now understood as “information society”, and it is legitimated by invoking and respecting the above mentioned fundamental principles, among which it is suitable to underline the principle of solidarity. Since the priority purpose of the University, in its condition of a public service, is to echo the demands of the society, we must design programmes of rational exploitation of the resources. This is the double aim of this Master: not only to get students into the considered frame of mind, but also to suggest to them credible ways of usage, to familiarize them with the nowadays inevitable CITs and their utility.

Europe, 21st Century: Philosophy and Social Sciences

From 2004/2005, UCM-endorsed in partnership with the following institutions: Universidade de Lisboa, Universidade de Coimbra, and Universidade do Porto; Université de Provence (Aix-Marseille I) and Université des Sciences et Technologies Lille I; Humboldt Universität zu Berlin and Universität Hannover; Università degli Studi di Firenze; Universitatea Babeş-Bolyai, Cluj-Napoca (Romania).

The main goal of the Human & Social Sciences has always been to develop the knowledge and, eventually, to criticize the social and cultural environment in which they co-exist. This Master aims at rebuilding the legacy of the critical thinking (like the School of Frankfurt did in Europe and America after the two World Wars), referring this time to the characteristic realities of the current political organizations and cultural production in Europe. In both fields a problem arises on a common base. The European political organization, which is determined by the gradual convergence of its economic and social structures, has not established yet the identity signs that could make it as a real unified community. Given the fact that those identity signs cannot come from History (dominated, in the case of Europe, more by the conflicts among its members rather than by efforts of a peaceful integration), the source from which they can be obtained should be found at the heritage of its common culture.

(2010) Human Rights in the Mediterranean. Approaches and Perspectives for a Dialogue

The 1st edition of the Euro-Mediterranean Summer University is aimed at consolidating a lasting project at the service of citizens and institutions. EMUI offers its first educational activity under the support of the "Foro de Vecindad de Jávea". The design of these courses has a specific goal: the respect in the diversity of the theoretical approaches and the plurality in the political positions.

This project expects to have a relevant impact at an academic-research and socio-political level. The innovation of the structure and contents of the Euro-Mediterranean Summer University will be guaranteed not only by the professionals taking part on this event, but mainly by the participants that are trying to find appropriate answers to their expectations and commitments. The dialogue arises as the main tool to conduct the debates and determine the conclusions.

The common work is also based on the plurality, in line with the different goals of the academic-research institutions taking part on the project, such as the Universities that subscribe it. Diversity cannot ignore the nature and purpose of the knowledge: contributing to improve the access to resources with the necessary help of the institutions, be them public or private, which is the case of those ones that have decided to support the Euro-Mediterranean Summer University.

THEORIA Research Team (Critical Project in Social Sciences) | In Partnership

This research team was founded in 1988 under the name “Europe, fin-de-siècle: Thought and Culture – Critical Project in Social Sciences”. It is nowadays a stable and solid group (Ref. UCM 940052), and is registered in the Madrid Council for Education Directory of Research Teams (Ref. CAM 1391).

38 researchers involved with academic and research institutions in Spain and other EU countries which, during the 2005-2010 period, led to the following productivity: 124 research projects, 46 PhD. thesis; 52 Diplomas in Advanced Studies (DEA); 129 books, 209 book chapters, 295 articles.

The National Agency for Research Evaluation (Agencia Nacional de Evaluación y Prospectiva, ANEP) rated the group with a score of 63 points in a 0-70 scale. (Madrid, October.2005).

Observatory “Euro-Med: Social Technology and Digital Citizenship”

The Euro-Mediterranean University Institute of Malta, in cooperation with the Complutense University of Madrid and under the patronage of the Anna Lindh Euro-Mediterranean Foundation, sets up the Project “Euro-Med: Social Technology and Digital Citizenship”, a digital monitoring observatory available for public and private institutions interested in the area. The University Department emerges with a triple goal: promoting the social ownership of the technology in order to contribute to the eradication of the gap in the Mediterranean area and to foster the development of a digital citizenship within the framework of the construction of the concept of Europe. This initiative complements the theoretical-practical training of those attending the Master “Information and Knowledge Society”, an academic program offered by the institutions mentioned above, which is an equally valid complementary training for professionals coming from adjacent areas.

The observatory aims at analyzing different initiatives focused on studying the concept of digital citizenship in order to build a Euro-Mediterranean common space, going further euro centrism temptations. This concept is an essential issue to integrate a community in which the digital gap finds itself at the same time with other cultural, racial, economic and territorial long standing gaps, which undermine the attempts to carry out a deep modernization of the idea of Europe and a cultural and political harmonization between the borders of the Mediterranean. This specific Euro-Mediterranean citizenship is based on the social ownership of the technology, and the consequent impact on democracy, the Human Rights fourth generation, the digital inclusive policies and the electronic governance development.

Based on descriptors such as "Citizenship and new technologies", "Citizenship and information", "Digital monitoring" the Observatory, on a specific need and descriptor ("Information Society and Globalization Cosmopolitan") is divided into the following sub-departments: 1 "Media Lab", 2 "Digital Gap", 3 "Digital Diaspora", 4 "Knowledge and Free Software" and 5 "Digital Citizenship and Digital Gap"

Given the fact that this Department operates inside the structure of the Euro-Mediterranean University Institute, all the work and research will be mainly focused on the Mediterranean area. To this end, we pretend to cover the following activities:

1. A Media Lab dealing with the research on social networks and production of free knowledge.
2. A specific research area about the digital gap, in order to generate useful indicators showing and comparing the current situation of our focus area with other areas in the world.
3. A research area dealing with the "digital Diaspora", having in account that this concept implies the use of new technologies such as mobiles, laptops and different communication systems that allow social cohesion among the migrants communities.
4. A software and free knowledge Observatory focused on the Mediterranean area, which will be in charged on producing reports about the developments and implementation of the new technologies in the region, as well as the recommendations on these issues, especially those concerning the integration of these technologies in the public administration and the e-governance.
5. An advising department dealing with the digital citizenship, as a tool to fight against the digital gap, to foment the cohesion among the different communities that live in the area and providing their own technology to the developing countries in the area.

Goals.- As we have indicated the specific objectives are: 1) forming and informing the public and governments in the area, 2) establishing a stable track digital observatory serving citizens and institutions, 3) making a new generation of academics lead the project and giving them the opportunity, 4) achieving greater involvement of politicians and businessmen in the proposed objectives, 5) and implementing the mechanisms for similar programs recommended by the European Commission.

Malta & Fes Campus (provisional premises)

The creation of the Euro-Mediterranean University Institute_UCM has implied the legitimating and reinforcement of the institutional network, which will be the support of the expected creation of the Southern-Euro-Mediterranean University by the European Commission. According to the agenda of the 2nd Euro-Mediterranean Ministerial Conference on Higher Education (scheduled for April the 25th and 26th, and then postponed for October 2010 due to aerial navigation issues), the EMUI will have its headquarters in Fès, Madrid and Malta.

Since its creation on October 2007, the Direction of the Euro-Mediterranean University Institute keeps fluent relations with the Maltese Ministries of Education and Foreign Affairs, in order to manage the expediting of the teaching and research programs according to the Law of this State and to establish the definitive headquarters.

Along that same line, the Direction of the EMUI keeps fluent relations with the Direction of the Centre Marocain Interdisciplinaire des Études Stratégiques et Internationales (CMIESI) and the Rector of the Université Sidi Mohamed Ben Abdellah, which will become the future headquarters of the EMUI in Fès (Morocco).
